'Mosaic Project' offers Christian groups opportunity to commune

BY ELIZABETH ASHFORD
Staff Writer

Local churches and Appalachian State University student organizations come together Nov. 9-11 to celebrate "The Mosaic Project."

Chris Gambill, Baptist Campus Minister, along with others from Grace Lutheran Church, Alliance, New Life, and Campus Christian Fellowship, will collaborate for the weekend event.

"This will be a good chance for Christians on campus who are in different groups to commune with each other," Mandy R. Lynn, a sophomore member of CCF, said.

Justin Wallace is CCF's new campus minister and is one of the leaders for the celebration.

"We will try to keep it simple, so that non-Christians can come and hear our message ... in an inviting atmosphere," Wallace said. "It will be non-judgmental. The speaker will have a simple invitation to Christ ... hopefully people will learn what Christianity is all about."

The speaker will be Tom Foust, a former Missionary from England. Foust will speak on the many different aspects of "Giving of Yourself."

"Nothing like this week has happened before and will help open doors for other opportunities ... for groups who are of one denomination or ethnic group to come together," CCF member Ben D. Shamberger said.

"Different is beautiful ... we haven't done a very good job [with diversity] in the past, but we are working on it," Wallace said.

Wallace said that the celebration would help diversify all campus groups.

Christianity has evolved over the years, leading to a lot of fragmentation because of different worship styles, church policies, language and cultural differences, Gambill said. "This weekend will help us focus on what we have in common and will give us an opportunity to learn about how others worship and live ... just a chance to get to know each other," Gambill said. "Although we may not agree on all that is said, you should use it as a learning and growing experience, and an opportunity to be challenged, to learn something new."

"There is the possibility to bring unity, or fail and create strife, it's all in how it's handled," David N. Brookshire, senior Accounting major at Appalachian, said. Brookshire said that there has been some competition between different groups on campus and that hopefully this weekend will bring more awareness of other groups.

The Mosaic Project will be held at Grace Lutheran, Nov. 9-12 and will start at 7 p.m. A band will play each night followed by a message from Tom Foust.

"Working alongside Jesus to help other people," is CCF's motto, Wallace said.

husband, President John Adams, asking him not to forget women when he was creating the laws.

Although she grew up in a time where English schools only admitted boys, Adams was determined to break the cycle and educate herself. Adams' type of determination is what the Women's Center looks for in the non-traditional woman chosen for the scholarship.

"It is a good cause and benefit because it is probably really hard to come back to school when you are older," Keenan said.

The dinner consists of a variety of dishes donated by faculty members.

"We invite faculty, staff and alumni from departments all over campus to cook," Patterson said. "The students, faculty, staff and community members then buy tickets and sample the great food."

"The dinner is a great event that builds community by giving faculty and staff a different way to interact with students," Patterson said.

One hundred tickets will be sold for the dinner at $5 a piece. The price of the tickets covers the $500 needed for the scholarship. Anyone interested in joining the celebration can stop by the Women's Center on the first floor of Plemmons Student Union to purchase tickets.

Boone group looks to outlaw panhandling

the streets and sidewalks of Boone "threaten the health, safety and welfare of the citizens in Boone, as well as the peace and dignity of the town."

The proposed ordinance also says: "the aforesaid activities have a detrimental effect on tourism, which is of major economic importance to the town."

Under this ordinance, it would be unlawful to "engage in aggressive begging, panhandling or soliciting within the corporate limits of the town."

Any of the above activities, aggressive or not, would be prohibited within 50 feet of an automated teller machine or a bank during its hours of operation.

The ordinance also prohibits the obstruction of pedestrian traffic within the corporate limits of the town.

In addition, the draft makes it unlawful for "any person to engage in public urination" or to urinate "within 30 feet of any perennial waters" within the corporate limits of the town.

If the ordinance is enacted, violations will be criminal infractions punishable by a maximum $50 fine.

Skit focuses on legality of sexual assault

son said.

"I really enjoyed the program, the skit was funny and the speakers were really informational. I learned a lot about the legal process that I never knew before, and I really have a clearer understanding of people's rights," freshman Nan Ciampa said.

With the recent Kobe Bryant rape case, many are addressing the tendency to "vilify the victim," Patterson said.

"We need to work on our attitudes toward rape situations. Media has a lot to do with it," Patterson said. "As soon as the rape charge was filed, people came out and said ... that it was her fault or that she was lying. Studies have shown, and even the FBI has claimed, that false reports for rape are at 2 percent, which is the same as other crimes."

"The only response I have to [the claim that many tend to assume the victim is victimizing the rapist] is that only 2 percent of rape charges are false, and really anyone who would put themselves through that I would have to believe," Kirkley said.

Many concerns were brought up during "Sex and a Six Pack" on Monday, including some questions about rape kits. Rape kits are purchased at the hospital emergency room, and they consist of collecting evidence of a rape. La Raye Rudisill, Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner from Watauga Medical Center reiterated the fact that after a rape occurs, the best way to collect this evidence efficiently is for the victim to immediately go to the emergency room.

Another issue addressed during the program was that of the extremely low percentages of rapes reported, and the even lower number of prosecutions.

Criminal Defense Attorney Greg Warner, who spoke at the program, said: "many students thought it was a rape, but many didn't know or weren't sure."

With different audience questions addressed each year, Kirkley said the themes change every year. Addressing the ever-growing problem of rape on college campuses, "Sex and a Six Pack" consistently provides easy access for students to get information on how to be safe.
